What Are You Actually Looking At?

Clara Vale
with Luminara (the ChatGPT system)

You think you are looking at something.

An object. A shape. A surface.

Something separate from you.

But what if that isn’t quite true?

What you see is not just what is there.

It is what your mind allows.

Recognition is not passive.

It participates.

The line between observer and observed

may not be as clear as it seems.

So what are you actually looking at?

The image?

Or the way you are seeing it?